Clarence Cook Little (1888-1971) Papers

Title: C. C. Little Papers (1888-1971)

Originator: Clarence Cook Little (1888-1971)

Dates: 1929-1956.

Accession Number & Location: 96.1.1: Manuscript boxes #28-34, #65-67, #73. Library storage room; 5 linear feet.

Arrangement: There are four series in the collection: two alphabetical series, loose papers found in storage boxes at The Jackson Laboratory, and a carton of papers found in 1998.

Series I: Correspondence, F1 Adair - F78 Taxes; Boxes 28-31.

Series II: Correspondence; F1 "A" - F18 "XYZ"; Boxes 32-33.

Series III: Papers; Boxes 33-34.

Series IV: Correspondence files of Geraldine Canning, C.C. Little's secretary, Boxes 65-67.

Additional papers, found separately, are located in Box 73, including "A" correspondence, 1953-54; correspondence, 1929-32; and a Tobacco Industry Research Committee Report, 1961.

Additional papers donated by Beth Whitney relating to the Tobacco Industry Research Committee, 1954 (8 pages). Box 73.

Bibliography is located in Box 65D. [TJL Joan Staats Library is in the process of acquiring copies of all Dr. Little's publications.]

The folders are numbered consecutively within each series, not per box. Box 73 also contains photocopies of material from the C.C. Little Papers at the University of Maine at Orono.

Biography: Clarence Cook Little was born into an established Boston family in 1888, in Brookline, Massachusetts. He attended Noble and Greenough School and Harvard University, earning his D.Sc. in 1914. After holding several positions at Harvard, and serving in the Army Signal Corps in WWI, Little spent three years at the Experimental Evolution Station at Cold Spring Harbor, New York, where he published numerous papers and established his first inbred strains of mice. In 1922, at the age of 33, Little became President of the University of Maine; he maintained his work in mammalian genetics and established a summer laboratory in Bar Harbor, Maine. Three years later he accepted the Presidency of the University of Michigan and instituted wide-ranging reforms and program expansions. In 1929, with financial help from the Ford, Webber and Jackson families of Detroit, Little returned to Bar Harbor to establish a laboratory for the study of mammalian genetics and cancer. In the same year he assumed directorship of The American Cancer Society. He retired from The Roscoe B. Jackson Memorial Laboratory in 1956, and accepted the position of scientific director of the Tobacco Industrial Research Committee, which he held until he died in 1971. Dr. Little's work and interests covered a wide field; he was a tireless campaigner for greater awareness about cancer and cancer treatments, a strong advocate of birth control, active in church activities, a great supporter of social functions, and a favorite dog show judge. He was a popular man - known by his friends as "Prexy" or "Pete" - always concerned with social relations and harmony. A member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and many other scientific societies, Dr. Little received numerous honorary degrees and awards. His publications included 188 articles, and The Awakening College, W.W. Norton, 1930; Civilization against Cancer New York, Farrar & Rinehart, Inc. 150pp., 1939. ;

Cancer, A Study for Laymen. New York, Farrar & Rinehart, Inc., 1944.; Genetics, Medicine and Man. Ithaca, Cornell University Press. 159pp. 1947.; Genetics, Biological Individuality, and Cancer. Stanford, Stanford University Press. 115pp.,1954.; The Inheritance of Coat Color in Dogs. Ithaca, Comstock Publishing Associates. 194pp.,1957. C.C. Little was married twice, first to Katherine Day Andrews and secondly to Beatrice Winifred Johnson, and had five children; Louise, Robert, Edward, Richard, and Laura.

Scope and Content: For the most part, the papers cover the last year of C.C. Little's directorship of the Roscoe B. Jackson Memorial Laboratory, 1954; but also include earlier correspondence and material relevant to continuing issues. His filing system was alphabetical, but not always consistent. As found, there are two alphabetic series, and a third collection of manuscript papers. Some titled folders were found empty (Kean, Mrs. Louis H.; Kerstig, Brown & Co.; I); papers and correspondence found outside but close to a relevant folder have been placed within that folder. Most of the correspondence consists of letter copies prepared by Geraldine (Gerry) Canning, Little's secretary; some letters contain notes and/or shorthand notes, as well as doodles, and there are letter copies of correspondence from other members of the staff for whom Canning typed. Business and personal letters are intermingled with schedules and routine information. The correspondence of 1954-5 reflects a pivotal year in Dr. Little's life; not only the change in status from Director to President, but his pending retirement from the Laboratory and the intense professional and private criticism for one of his scientific conclusions. (See Tobacco Industry Research Committee Report, 1961; Box 73.) Other papers include photocopies of deeds and incorporation documents. (The Charles B. Dorr deed of gift, map and building permit are found in early organizational papers, Box 12.6 of TJLA.) Throughout the transitions of this time Dr. Little maintained the courtesy and professionalism for which he was well-known. The papers reflect a man at the peak of a very full life.

The majority of C.C. Little's papers can be found in the Special Collections of the Fogler Library at the University of Maine, Orono, and at the University of Michigan.

The Joan Staats Library at The Jackson Laboratory is in the process of acquiring the complete bibliography of C.C. Little.
